This is a typical example of where there was no need to burn.

The green waste had only been piled up for a week or so and it hadn't dried out. It was easily accessible and could have been trucked away to Exeter green waste station some 5 or ten minutes away, or chipped/mulched in situ.

Instead, Tamar Ridge Estate I believe, set fire to it and as you can see and did it with no consideration to populated areas like Grindelwald who were smoked out.

Environmental Health Dept., The Environment Division and West Tamar Council were all officially notified of the complaint.
